David Simon

Mr. Simon attended Cambridge University where he majored in Business and Economics before migrating to the USA and working in the airline industry where he flew for Eastern Airlines, American Trans Air and TWA. As a producer, Mr. Simon, while working with Eastern Airlines, was one of the pioneers of what is now become the in-flight safety video procedures we see on most airlines today.

In 1991, Mr. Simon left aviation after the demise of Eastern Airlines and launched his television production consulting firm called Sun Broadcasting, which subsequently launched the first Caribbean cable channel in North America (Tropical TV), securing clients such as the Caribbean Broadcasting Union (CBU) and the Caribbean Media Corporation. As a result of his abilities in the area of niche programming, he was commissioned by such people as Willie Gary-(famed attorney), Evander Holyfield, (Heavyweight Boxing champion), Alvin James (TV industry veteran), Marlon Jackson (Jackson 5), to assist them in launching a black network (Black Family Channel), which soon became a regionally distributed channel on Comcast. Mr. Simon has also advised and consulted many in the television industry such as Minaj Broadcasting (Nigeria), where he served as their VP of Business Development, Colours TV, also as Business Development consultant, which gained national distribution on Dish network and Urban American Television Network, where he was a major shareholder and Senior VP and later was successfully taken public, Soundview Broadcasting, NY and most recently VH2 Networks.

His expertise in the areas of quality niche programming and program development led to his stint with American Express and American Airlines developing content from the Caribbean tourism sector for viewing on board American Airline flights and in airport lounge audiences. Since 2007 has been consulting and at intervals been contracted by Soundview Broadcasting and Caribbean Media Corporation in the USA with the launching of their new network Caribvision TV which is currently distributed via cable in over 27 Caribbean countries, UK, Canada and several top 20 US markets.

Having these expertise in the fields that the company is into, there is no doubt that the new president will deliver a whole new level of success for Vuuzle Media Corp.
